

Are we asking the right questions?

William Bialek

Joseph Henry Laboratories of Physics and Lewis-Sigler Institute for Integrative Genomics, Princeton University, Princeton NJ 08544

IN the relatively short history of the q-bio conference, some approaches to the quantitative exploration of biological systems have become conventional. These approaches have been productive, but this seems like a good time to ask if we are missing things. Where would we like to be after another decade? At the risk of being heckled, I'll try to answer this question. It's an after dinner talk, so don't expect too much.